RUSSIANS TAKE TWO MORE RAIL JUNCTIONS

THE twin Eastern Pripet rail centres of Mozyr and Kalinkovichi were captured in an outflanking movement by Russian forces yesterday, according to a Marshal Stalin Order of the Day, broadcast last night from Moscow.

Cossack cavalry, states Reuter's Special Correspondent, are already far beyond Mozyr; and the battle for Pinsk—more than half-way to the Curzon Line—has begun.

A German report states that Russian forces have also broken into the Kerch defences.

A Soviet air fleet, motorised brigades, cavalry, ski troops and infantry shared in this advance, which, on the fourth day of General Rokossovsky's new offensive, carried them through defence rings five to seven miles in depth surrounding the two towns, states Reuter's Correspondent.

This double victory means that the Russian hold on the main north-south railway is unchallenged for 200 miles, from just below the long out-flanked fortress of Zhitomir down to Zhitomir.

From Kalinkovichi runs the only railway to Pinsk, and between them the two towns control the roads, which are of inestimable value in this vast, grim Polesie region of fir and birch forests and treacherous marshlands.

The next move will probably be a combined drive on Pinsk, along the road to Brest-Litovsk, by Rokossovsky's men and the forces of General Vatutin, who are driving westward from Sarny, says Harold King, Reuter's Special Correspondent in Moscow. These forces have now reached a point 55 miles due south of Pinsk, on the southern fringe of the Pripet Marshes.

East of Vinnitsa, the fourth day of the great battle for the Odessa-Warsaw railway has seen no slackening in the fighting.

Nor, adds King, has it seen any strategic or even tactical gain by the Germans to repay their enormous losses.

In the latest fighting, Soviet guns, supported by bombers and Stormoviks, have smashed half the German tank strength.

The German counter-attacks took the form of a pincer movement against the flanks of the Russian wedge driven into their positions. The aim was to free the Vinnitsa-Tulchin highway in front of the German lines. The attempt met with no success, and there is confidence here that Vatutin has the situation well in hand.

Eight thousand Germans have been killed in the Vinnitsa battle since Tuesday, and several hundred tanks and Ferdinand mobile guns put out of action, Reuter's correspondent states.

Pushing on from Sarny, the Russians are now advancing along the railway to Kovel, and have passed the station of Tutovichi, 11 miles west of Sarny. Further south, a second force—which took Korets—is driving along the road to Rovno

South-west of Novograd-Volynsk, one force has moved significantly nearer the Shepetovka junction, which, like Vinnitsa, the Germans are trying to hold at all costs. A second force, closing in from the north, is 14 miles away. A third thrust is being developed, which would outflank Shepetovka from the south and cut its rail connection with the largish town of Proskurov, on the Odessa-Warsaw trunk line.

Dr. Finkhoff, German radio war reporter, said, in a message last night from the Eastern front, that, after three days' violent fighting in the Kerch area, Soviet troops have broken into the German lines.

"Several strategic heights also fall into Soviet hands. The present Soviet offensive on the Crimean front is the most powerful so far. We are outmatched by a superior enemy."

The Russian communiqué states that 40 other places were taken in the Mozyr-Kalinkovichi advance, and a town 20 miles west of Mozyr and the railway stations of Klinak, Kachiry and Kozenki; that the offensive west and south-west of Sarny continued, Stepan (35 miles north of Rovno) being captured; that west and south-east of Novograd-Volynsk several places were taken, while heavy counter-attacks were repelled east of Vinnista.

Time Bombs in Orange Cargoes For Britain

THE distribution of oranges, which the British Food Ministry promised should begin early in January, has been delayed because of time bombs discovered in the vessels which brought the fruit from Spain.

Foreign Office inquiries are now being made as to the origin of the bombs and the manner in which they were smuggled into the cargo.

In an official statement, yesterday, the Ministry said that the discovery of bombs had necessitated a very careful search of every cargo. The oranges set aside for distribution were coming from Palestine and Spain, the larger quantity from Spain. About ten days ago, while the vessels were on their way to Britain, there was an explosion in one of the ships, and between 200 and 300 cases, each containing about 60lb. of oranges, were destroyed. When this ship put into a British port every case of oranges had to be very carefully examined.

Another orange ship arrived, and an examination of the cargo, which was carried out immediately, revealed a time bomb secreted in the cargo.

The bomb that exploded, and that found in the cargo, were of a small type, probably not much bigger than an orange.

Election of U.C.D. Governing Body

THE results of the University College, Dublin, graduates' election for six seats on the Governing Body of the College were declared last night as follows:—

Professors Rt. Rev. Monsignor P. J. Boylan, 1,718; J. J. Hogan, 1,522; G. A. T. O'Brien, 1,465; J. R. Bayley Butler, 1,282; J. N. Meenan, 1,274; R. F. Shields, 1,197.

The other candidates obtained votes as follows:—F. F. Donovan, 1,162; Professor Agnes O'Farrelly, 1,151; Rev. A. Egan, 853; C. O'Daly, 784; R. J. McHugh, 690; P. O'Donoghue, 602; N. O'Dwyer, 579; T. Flynn, 521; P. P. Cormack, 494; T. C. Devitt, 410; T. P. Waller, 297.

Monsignor Boylan and Professors Hogan, O'Brien, and Meenan stood as members of a panel of five candidates—the remaining one being Mr. Donovan—who were put forward by a large majority of the staff on a programme of general improvement of the College facilities.

The Rev. A. Egan, Mr. Carroll O'Daly, and Mr. T. Flynn stood as a panel of three candidates, with a programme of extending widely the use of Irish in the College and of introducing the tutorial system.

Professor Shields, one of the other successful candidates, has been a member of the Governing Body for many years, while Professor Bayley Butler wins a seat for the first time.

Price of Eggs

The Order prescribing a maximum price for eggs has been revoked because of the current seasonal increase in production.

Poland Seeks Four-Power Talks

TO SETTLE DISPUTES WITH RUSSIA

A MOVE to end all disputes between Poland and Russia was made last night, when the Polish Government in London issued a statement announcing its intention to seek the mediation of Britain and America for the opening of four-Power discussions to settle all outstanding questions.

The statement was issued after a critical day of meetings, during which Mr. Eden, British Foreign Secretary, had a number of talks with Polish statesmen.

The Polish statement was as follows:—

"The Polish Government have taken cognisance of the declaration of the Soviet Government, contained in the Tass communiqué of January 11th, 1944, which was issued as a reply to the declaration of the Polish Government of January 5th.

"The Soviet communiqué contains a number of statements, to which a complete answer is afforded by the ceaseless struggle against the Germans, waged at the heaviest cost, by the Polish nation, under the direction of the Polish Government. In their earnest anxiety to safeguard the complete solidarity of the United Nations, especially at a decisive stage of their struggle against the common enemy, the Polish Government consider it to be preferable now to refrain from further public discussions.

"While the Polish Government cannot recognise unilateral decisions or accomplished facts which have taken place, or might take place, on the territory of the Polish Republic, they have repeatedly expressed their sincere desire for a Polish-Soviet agreement on terms which would be just and acceptable to both sides.

"To this end the Polish Government are approaching the British and United States Governments with a view to securing through their intermediary the discussion by the Polish and Soviet Governments, with the participation of the British and American Governments, of all outstanding questions, the settlement of which should lead to a friendly and permanent co-operation between Poland and the Soviet Union.

"The Polish Government believes this to be desirable in the interests of the victory of the United Nations and harmonious relations in post-war Europe."

The American State Department announced last night that it is giving immediate attention to the request from the Polish Government.

Wolna Polska (Free Poland), the Polish newspaper published in Moscow, declared yesterday: "It is silly nonsense to think that the Russians want to Sovietise or Russify Poland. It is true, however, that we will give aid in restoring a democratic and Parliamentary Poland, which will allow all people to express their minds on the question of their country's political regime."

Strike Threat

Dublin laundresses will strike on January 26th if their claims are not granted, it was decided at a meeting of the Irish Women Workers' Union last night. They say that the Dublin and District Laundries' Association has refused their claim of a bonus of 4s. 6d. per week and improved working conditions. They say that they have received only 3s. 6d. per week to meet the higher cost of living, although the Government bonus ceiling is 11s.

KINDERSLEY BOY NOW WITH GRANDPARENTS

GAY KINDERSLEY, the thirteen years old son of Lady Oranmore and Browne and her former husband, the Hon. Philip Kindersley, yesterday was given into the custody of his grandfather, Lord Kindersley, by an order of the Irish Courts.

Thus ended an historic legal fight, lasting—in its final stages—fifteen days.

While his future was being decided by the Supreme Court yesterday, Gay Kindersley waited in the Registrar's room — for the most part alone—reading a magazine. He waited until five past three, when the long case came to an end. He waited until Lord Oranmore came to tell him that he would be handed over to his grandparents in an hour's time.

While Lord Oranmore said good-bye to Gay, in the Registrar's room, Lord and Lady Kindersley discussed travelling arrangements with their counsel. Already they had cancelled reservations on yesterday afternoon's 'plane. At the end of the hour, which they passed in the empty Supreme Court, they had still come to no decision.

Shortly before four o'clock they walked down the long passage to the Registrar's room. Here they took possession of Gay, as Lord Oranmore said his last good-bye and left to tell Lady Oranmore of the Court's decision.

Soon afterwards Gay and his grandparents entered the High Court for the final scene. Gay leading, Lady Kindersley smiling at him encouragingly, Lord Kindersley looking straight ahead.

The Court waited five or six minutes for Mr. Justice Haugh. As he entered, Lady Kindersley patted Gay on the back. "Stand up, dear," she whispered. But Gay does not need to be told anything about courts. He was already on his feet.

It was over quickly then. The two opposing counsel gave a few short words of explanation—"Has the boy been handed over?" asked Mr. Justice Haugh—and it was finished.

The barristers shook hands with Lord and Lady Kindersley and then with Gay. He did not meet their eyes as he shook hands. In another moment he was gone with his grandparents through a side door.

The Eton term begins next Wednesday. Lord Kindersley told me that everything has been prepared for Gay to join the school on that day.

Management Act Repeal Sought

Members of County Councils are just so many marionettes, said Alderman Richard Corish, T.D., at yesterday's meeting of the General Council of County Councils in the Mansion House, Dublin, when he declared himself "totally against the Managerial Act."

The Council was discussing the final report of a special committee set up to consider the County Management Act, and which contained a series of amendments to the Act, calculated by the committee to "go far to secure representative control without hampering the Manager in the honest and fearless exercise of his executive duties."

When the adoption of the report had been proposed by Senator G. Sweetman and seconded by Senator M. Aherne, Alderman Corish moved an amendment that the bill be repealed. It was accepted.

French Capture Heights In Advance to Cassino

DRIVING over the snow-covered Apennines, French forces, with whom American troops are co-operating, are carrying out a peak-to-peak advance on a seven miles front which threatens to outflank Cassino at long range, says Reuter's Special Correspondent at Allied H.Q., North Africa.

In a push of two miles up the Colli-Atina mountain road, north of the Rome highway, Allied forces have straightened out the line of attack for the final assault on Cassino. Peaks captured include the great Monna Casale, which dominates the whole region.

American forces, working up from Cervaro along the main road, are directly threatening Monte Trocchio the last important defensive position before the Rapido river and Cassino. Triple Allied spearheads are engaged in stiff fighting for this height.

A counter-attack on a very strong scale, aimed at retaking Cervaro from the Americans, was repulsed.

General Juin's forces, operating among wild crags west of Filignano,

The Allies have taken over 6,000 German prisoners since they landed in Italy on September 13th, it was officially announced yesterday are now two and a half miles from San Biagio, and nine miles from Atina, along a road which crosses the deep canyons flanking Cassino to the north.

Capture of the lofty San Pietro ridge and the great Monna Casale massif gave the French control of another two miles of the road to Atina and completed the capture of all the high ground north and north-east of Acquafondata.

Karl Praeguer, German News Agency correspondent in Italy, said last night: "The Germans have abandoned the village of Acquafondata to French forces." This has not been confirmed, but, according to Reuter, the French were last night directly threatening the village

On the Eighth Army front, New Zealand troops improved their positions in the Orsogna area by an advance of some 500 yards. Patrols on both sides are fighting some three miles south west of Guardiagrele, about sixteen miles from the coast.

A heavy blow was struck on Thursday by combined heavy and medium bombers against the chain of airfields ringing Rome. These included Centocelle, in the suburbs of the capital; Guidonia, 14 miles north-east of the capital, and Ciampino, eight miles to the south-east. Flying Fortresses attacked Guidonia, Italy's chief experimental station for testing new types of aircraft, which may be compared with Rostock in Germany. Workshops, assembly plant and hangars were badly damaged.—(Reuter.)

Lorry Owners' Fear Growth Of Monopolies

THE increase of the G.S.R.'s net road revenue from £6,194 in 1940 to £336,321 in 1942 was commented upon in a statement made by Mr. M. W. McGuire, Limerick, chairman of the Merchant Lorry Owners' Association. This increase, he said, was achieved at the expense of the private lorry owner, who was prevented from using his vehicles. The national imports of fuel were confiscated by the Government, and made available in virtually unlimited quantities to the railway company, regardless of the fact that the private lorry owner, by his purchases of motor spirit and lubricating oil during the pre-emergency period, had contributed to our present quotas of these commodities.

The farming community, the consuming public and the worker, particularly the urban worker, also contributed to this increase of revenue. The Government, by its recent actions in regard to the Great Southern Railways Company and the Dublin Transport Company, had dealt a severe blow to private enterprise. What guarantee had the business community that a monopoly-thirsty Government would be satisfied with a monopoly of transport? Would the flour mills, bacon factories and other industries built up by private enterprise be taken over on the pretext that such action was in the public interest?

Kilkenny R.M.S. Gives Evidence

Apart from a few small technicalities or irregularities, he stood over the officials in this inquiry, said Mr. S. J. Moynihan, County Manager, yesterday, at the sworn inquiry into the administration of Kilkenny Mental Hospital.

Charges made by the County Council Committee were refuted by Mr. M. J. Hogan, Clerk, and Dr. P. J. Cassin, R.M.S.

Referring to his approach to Councillor Hayes after the first day's inquiry, Mr. Hogan said he did so on the instructions of his legal adviser, who pointed out to him the seriousness of Councillor Hayes' allegation that he offered onions from the institution to Hayes. The offer which he made to Councillor Hayes was in respect of plants, his (Hogan's) own property, and was not in the nature of a bribe.

Dr. Cassin, R.M.S., said that he purchased the farm himself, intending to hand it over to the Mental Hospital if the County Council were agreeable. He made the purchase to avoid the danger of losing it. He admitted having used the institution's reaper and binder on his farm at Tullaroan, and that patients occasionally did farm work for him.

Mr. S. J. Moynihan, County Manager, said that the purchase of the farm was desirable. He did not regard the allegations against the R.M.S. as serious. Some actions taken by the R.M.S. should have been reported to him beforehand, when he would have had no objection.

The County Manager had not concluded his evidence when the inquiry was adjourned until to-day.

Bomb Kills Seven in Cinema

Seven people were killed and thirty-one injured when a bomb crashed through the roof of a cinema in a London district last night, says the Press Association. Shop windows on both sides of the main thoroughfare were shattered for 200 yards. Another bomb fell on a big store.

The cinema was fairly full when the explosion occurred. Late last night rescue workers were trying to reach two people believed to be buried in the theatre.

The manager said: "There was no panic. Immediately I heard the explosion I rushed on to the stage and, through the microphone, told everyone to remain in their seats until the lights were put up. The audience sat down calmly, and a few seconds later, when the lights were put on, I asked them to leave by the nearest exits. They walked out calmly. Some left the theatre not knowing what had happened."

It is believed that the bombs were dropped by a lone raider.

SWEEPER'S PAY FOR ENGINEER

AN admission that he had written to the Limerick gas engineer, Mr. F. K. Thomas, informing him that he was reducing his salary to £130 per annum, which was less than that of a city street sweeper, was made by Mr. J. J. Berkery, Limerick City Manager, yesterday, at the resumed sworn inquiry into the administration of Limerick Gas Works.

Mr. T. K. Liston, cross-examining the Manager, referred him to his letter of September 11th last, which placed Mr. Thomas in charge of distribution at a salary of £135 a year. The Manager said that for that salary Mr. Thomas would be in charge of nine men, the weekly wage of each of whom was £3 11s.

Mr. Liston—Is any street sweeper in the employment of the Corporation paid less than what you proposed to give the gas engineer?—No.

When Mr. Liston asked the witness if he consulted the Law Agent before making the change in the duties of the gas engineer, he replied that he could not say whether he discussed it with him before or after his letter. He thought the Law Agent said: "You cannot do that." The witness agreed that during the eight months—November, 1942, to June, 1943 — when Banks was in charge, the average number of therms per month was 46,775. For the previous eight months—when Mr. Thomas was in charge—the number was 46,112.

Mr. Liston—You suggested that Mr. Banks had some superior method of making gas. How then do you reconcile these figures?—The engineer was not making gas in October, 1942, when the crisis was reached.

So that the events of October, 1942, are justification for all your actions in this matter?—Absolutely.

Mr. Liston suggested that if the increased price, which operated when Banks was in charge, obtained when Mr. Thomas was in charge, the profit would have been £71,798, whereas the profit made while Banks was in charge was £11,000 odd. The manager said that he could not accept that suggestion without going into the figures.

The inquiry will be continued to-day.

Postal Permits For Ireland

British senders of packets and parcels containing publications, newspapers, magazines and books, or any goods or commodities, to addresses in Eire and to civilian addresses in Northern Ireland, must obtain a censorship permit before they are posted, says the Press Association.

Items tendered at a post office without "posted under censor's permit" address label affixed will be refused.

MORE RAIDS ON FRANCE

ALLIED bombers and fighters renewed their large-scale attack on targets in the Pas de Calais region of Northern France yesterday. The Press Association says that waves of bombers crossed the Straits of Dover to the French coast during the day, and air activity over the Continent continued until almost nightfall.

This assault brought the day's total of sorties by R.A.F., U.S.A.A.F., Dominion and Allied medium and fighter bombers and escorting fighters to more than 1,100, states the British Air Ministry News Service.

"United States fighters scored more than a four-to-one victory," stated United States Headquarters in London last night. This is according to preliminary evaluations of combat reports.

The German News Agency reported this morning:—

"British bombers, which flew over Reich territory during Friday evening, met with strong German air defences. According to reports so far received a considerable score can be expected for the air defences."

There was slight activity over parts of east and south-east England. Some bombs were dropped, but no one was injured. One aircraft, flying over the East Anglian coast at a height of over four miles, was shot down by heavy a.-a. fire.

Killed Trying to Save Dog

In an effort to save her dog, which ran in front of a train from Rosslare to Waterford, as she was walking beside the line, Mrs. Aileen Anderson, Prospect House, Slieverue, Co. Kilkenny, was struck by the engine and killed last Thursday. When the train had passed, the dog walked out from underneath, unhurt.

At the inquest on Mrs. Anderson held by Mr. R. Nolan, Coroner for South Kilkenny, a verdict of accidental death was returned by the jury, the engine driver being exonerated from all blame.

Secretaryship of The N.A.I.D.A.

A resolution demanding that the National Agricultural and Industrial Development Association reinstate Sean O Seaghdha as Secretary of the Association, and imperatively demanding that the Council rescind the resolution that it passed on November 15th last purporting to dismiss Mr. O Seaghdha, was unanimously passed at an extraordinary general meeting of members of the Association held in Dublin last night.

A Sofia message issued last night by the German Overseas News Service said the Bulgarian Minister of the Interior has ordered the evacuation of Sofia. Any entry into the city is forbidden until further notice, except in cases of urgent necessity.

PRIPET MARSHES KEY TO RUSSO-POLISH STRATEGY

BY OUR MILITARY CORRESPONDENT.

THE late General Sikorski was, perhaps, the greatest authority of all time on the strategic characteristics of the eastern frontier of Poland. The forcing of the river Sluch and the occupation of Sarny have once again made this a question of the first order of importance, and, therefore, an examination of the general's theories will not be inopportune.

The Poles are not at the moment physically concerned, but their successive defence of this region against Tartar, Turk and Russian will certainly have been made by the Germans the basis of their own defensive strategy—as, indeed, was the case in the fighting of 1915-17.

Sarny is a railway junction about 35 miles inside Poland, and west of the Sluch river. It is unlikely that the Germans expected to lose it as quickly as they did; possibly, it was not very strongly held. The fact that it lies on the main railway line from Kiev to Warsaw may explain how the Russians could drive a powerful column so far; because, apart from the railway, the entire approach is across the southern wing of the Pripet Marshes.

Just what a blow to the Germans is the loss of Sarny we cannot tell. The lateral line running north-south through it must certainly have been very useful at one time; but it seems unlikely that it can have been of much value of late. However, from the Russian point of view, and as a tributaries. It is unlikely that the Germans have omitted to take into account this element in the defence of the region.

Just south of the Pripet Marshes, properly so called, is the area known as "Little Polesia"—the basin of the Horyn River eastward from Rovno. This is quite extraordinarily difficult: in the palmiest days of their 1915 offensives the Austro-Germans were never able to force it from the west. Fronting eastwards, it even is stronger.

Further south is the elevated feature called the Gory Kazemienieckie, covering the Lwow-Rovno main railway line at a distance of about 15 miles, and beyond that are the left bank Dniester tributaries—considerable streams in deeply-cut valleys every ten miles or so.

Such being the terrain on which they are falling back, it is easier to understand the German statement that they have assigned to this front only three-quarters of a million men—say, 50 divisions. Presumably the Crimean Army is not included in this figure; and we might, conceivably, allow another 50 divisions for the northern half of the Russian front. Suppose we admit a third 50 divisions for Italy and the Balkans, we still have well over 100 divisions unaccounted for—without taking into account Finnish, Hungarian, Rumanian or other minor Axis allies. Evidently the Allies would not be justified in taking any unduly rash chances.

centre of rail communications, it has quite a considerable value. If they continue here, they should be able to build up a local centre for future offensive operations of quite an important character.

At the same time, the value of a place like Sarny should not be exaggerated. The whole zone of marshy forest extends for nearly 200 miles from north to south, and about 300 from east to west.

To quote Sikorski: "The strategic key of the Russo-Polish front—its spinal column—is marshy Polesia" (i.e., the Pripet Marsh region).

No major movements ever were, nor are likely to be, possible across this expanse. Apart from the Kiev railway through Sarny the only other feasible route is the railway line which parallels it some 60 miles to the north. Armoured trains, with light ground and air support, are all that could be maintained here.

In point of fact, Polish defence here was based on naval forces: Pinsk was the headquarters of an important flotilla of small motor-craft and monitors designed to operate on the Pripet and its numerous—or, rather, innumerable—point of view . .

Military Pension Dies With Pensioner

Mr. OSCAR TRAYNOR, Minister for Defence, yesterday rejected a proposal designed to continue payment of Army Pensions to the wife or children of a pensioner after his death. The suggestion was contained in a motion moved by General R. MULCAHY in the Senate, and subsequently withdrawn.

Mr. TRAYNOR said that for a considerable time it had been represented to the Government that a number of men who fought in Easter Week were in distress, and, after investigation, it decided that something should be done to relieve that distress. It was decided in their cases to increase the pension. The effect of Section 7 of the Army Pensions Act was, in fact, to increase the pension in case of distress. If this was a military service pension, he did not think it would be possible to bring a motion, because a pension was personal and died with the pensioner.

The motion, if accepted, would create a new precedent, and would cut across both pension codes. If the principle of the motion were accepted the time would come when they would have to face the contingency of continuing to pay pensions to the dependents of deceased pensioners, and it was impossible to foresee the financial implications which such a proposal would involve. He could not possibly recommend the terms of the motion.

Senator MULCAHY withdrew his proposal, and the Senate adjourned until 26th inst.

BIG TASK FOR FARMERS

BRIGHT news for farmers came from the Minister for Agriculture, Dr. James Ryan, yesterday, when he spoke at a meeting in Dublin, arranged by the Co. Dublin Committee of Agriculture.

Having congratulated them for increasing tillage from one and a half to two and a half million acres in four years and for producing as much wheat for the mills in 1943 as they did in the previous year, he said:—"We have not much to worry about so far as seed supplies are concerned." They had as much winter wheat seed as they required, and unless the acreage of wheat was going to be much more than they expected they would have plenty of spring seed, too.

Seed oats and barley seed supplies were good, and the root seed position would be better than last year. There would be enough grass seed to enable any farmer to put his fields in grass for a few years. He was not encouraging about the fertiliser position. "It is not different," he said, "and I am afraid it will not be any better. It depends on shipping. The farmer will get as much as he did last year."

Horse-drawn machinery will be in good supply. They had been trying to get a supply of tractors, reapers and binders and threshing machines, but had no definite assurance that they would succeed. The fuel position would be unchanged. Binder twine prospects were good. They had definite assurances, he said, with regard to the obtaining of raw materials, and a good deal of it had already come into the country.

Explaining the slow progress of the compulsory tillage programme from year to year, Dr. Ryan said that the demand for machinery was greater than the supply, and the fuel for power machinery was also reduced. Then there was the possibility that the war might go on for many years and that the fertility of the land would necessarily decline.

"The necessity of the moment is winter wheat," the Minister stressed. "You are aware that the Government considered it necessary to impose on every land-holder the obligation of producing a certain amount of wheat. If the defaulting minority had been as good as the great majority of farmers, compulsion would not have been necessary." He appealed to farmers to obey the order in the spirit as well as in the letter, and to do even more than the law required. They were still depending to a great extent on imported wheat, and, if anything should happen to reduce their small mercantile fleet, there was no possibility of renewing it.

The Co. Dublin farmer, with 20 per cent. of the total population of the State to feed, must be a good economist. He had the duty of getting 100 per cent. return from his land, and he asked him to do his duty.

Dealing with a complaint about fixing the price of eggs, the Minister said that if the average price of eggs was going to be 2s. 5d. a dozen for the whole year, he thought poultry producers would not have much to worry about during the year.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

Highland Romance

By Lynn Doyle

The Spanish Lady. By Maurice Walsh. Chambers. 9/6 net.

MAURICE WALSH is one of the authors who never disappoint their public. He knows his craft. He can construct a story and put flesh on its bones, attractive, feminine flesh, too, most of it, with a temperature a degree or two above the 98, a pulse a little above normal, and red corpuscles enough to colour the mouth without lipstick. The mechanism runs a few revolutions per minute faster than life, and the lighting is a trifle higher than reality. This is merely to say that Maurice Walsh is a sincere writer, who sets down life as he lives or dreams it. He is a romantic, a swashbuckler, by temperament. Born in a more congenial age he would have taken to the heather with Prince Charlie. His dreams are not unreal. They are but a couple of centuries late. Life was like that, once.

"The Spanish Lady" is one of his dreamings. I never saw a Spanish lady myself, but once: and she had a moustache. But the name is something of an incantation.

Sea-divided Celts

"Will you hear a Spanish Lady, how she wooed an Englishman?" asks the old ballad: and the answer is: "We will." For Maurice Walsh's Spanish Lady wooed an elderly Highland laird, a General, after Guernica. He saved her from a fate that used to be considered worse than death, and brought her home to Glen Affran. There was a Spanish connection there already; and a young Spaniard came seeking to renew it. A genuine Spaniard, Diego y Hernandes y Mendoza de Usted. Certainly, from the name, no Chinaman. The story resolves itself into: "Will he get her in the end" and you won't go to sleep that night till you find out.

You will meet many interesting characters. Most of them are Gaels—the author doesn't make little of them—and there is a hint of second-sight, and the strong tie of fosterage. The reader will be in the Highlands of Scotland in sight, and hearing, and character, and speech, and custom. One Irishwoman, Big Ellen M'Leod—M'Carthy that was—will, very properly, dominate the Highlanders. There is love and death, and shooting and fishing; and something like a duel with foils.

The Plot

The story is enriched by such details most of its way. But, when plot begins to dominate, something of the crime detection quality comes into the book. The reader will press on to the end with eagerness, perhaps even with skipping. I do not know whether this is praise or dispraise. But since the plot is so compelling in its development, I will not even outline its details, lest I curtail the reader's pleasure.

The book is some 130,000 words—or more—long; and is abundant value for its price. A few words less would have done, most of them adjectives. The Highland scene and folk will remain with you, albeit romanticised. The sternest piece of Scots realism in the book is the publisher's statement, perforated into the last page of the review copy, that it is complimentary, and not for sale.

But I wouldn't have sold it, anyway. Having devoured the story with an increase in my heartbeats to the end, I will read it again, more than once. I cannot imagine a much better antidote to war depression.

MORE PICTURE BOOK.

Carlow Poor But Proud

By Frank O'Connor

AS it goes on the Barrow digs out for itself a deeper and deeper hollow, which at Carlow forms a high, pale rampart of hills tilled to the top, a fine background for a typical prosperous river town, with handsome little terraces of Georgian painted in the pale blues and greens of the period; fine villas along the river banks, and the tower of a Protestant church which distinctly resembles Bruges belfry in galloping consumption. The town has an air. Exploring it, we came upon a row of whitewashed cottages, such as you find on the outskirts of every Irish town, but one of them had been raised a storey and battlemented along the top. Decidedly, it has an air. Ever since Swift libelled it, it has remained for the whole of Ireland "Carlow poor but proud." We went into a shop in the Main street for the makings of our lunch, and the old gentleman who served us grew prouder and prouder as Célimène listed our modest wants.

"A quarter of butter." (Oh, my!)

"A half-pound of tomatoes" (Well, really!)

"A threepenny box of spreadable cheese." (This is too much!)

The old gentleman spread his fingers on the counter, looked out the shop window with an indescribable expression of injured refinement, and murmured inarticulately that his customers usually took larger quantities.

"Carlow poor but proud," we said as we cycled on towards Castle comer. At Killedmin, in what must be one of the dirtiest graveyards in the world, there were the remains of a twelfth century church; two stout high-peaked gables, sprawling downhill with the sunlight leaking through the Anglo-Saxon window high up above the doorway. The doorway was in that curious, ungainly and rather Eastern style you find ranged from Kilteely near Dublin through Timahoe and Rahan as far as Annaghdown in Co. Galway. It is squat and bulky, with solid pilasters facing inwards, human heads and interlacing on the capitals, sometimes with bulbous bases and ornament in low relief. Here the itchy goats had wiped it off as you might wipe drawings off a blackboard, and in direct sunlight it seemed a dull and heavy frame for the view of the Barrow Valley and the Wicklow Hills whose blue and green twinkled in a mist of heat; but when we returned an hour later the light had shifted and the tide of shadow was flowing again through all its patterned channels. The baptismal name of the King of Leinster who built it mysteriously turns out to be that of no king known to history, which, of course, gives the antiquarians the chance of their lives.

We went to look for some place to boil our billy-can. Below the churchyard a man in shirt-sleeves was pacing up and down in the coolness of the hedge before his cottage, his red face shining like a lamp from its shadow.

"'Tis hot," he said, brushing away a fly.

"'Tis," said I. "Could we boil our can?"

"Ye could. to be sure," he said cheerfully. "Come in, let ye."

He blew on the fire, but his whole face changed to a look of alarm when he saw what Célimène was doing with the can. He made a wild rush for it.

"What are you doing with that, woman?" he cried. "Take off that lid or you'll smoke the water."

"Oh, dear!" said Célimène regretfully. "I didn't know."

"'Tis a funny thing," he said, as he balanced it on the fire, "when you leave off the lid you'll never get a taste from the water. When myself and the boys are all out at the hay we use that old iron pot there, and not a bit of smoke ever gets

By ROY McFADDEN

OUT on the roads of sky the moon stands poised
Like some pale traveller, hand raised at a door;
The fields turn, mouthing incoherent cries,
And the hills are gentle, kneeling by the shore.
Yes, he is one with them, being underground.
His eyes are in the water, his grey hands
Part the limp leaves; and his throat is swollen full
With the song of the last bird, a broken sound,
Like weeping of hidden women heard at night
When stars are stones and small winds congregate:
He has returned to life. O look, he lies
Cold in the shallows of the ebbing light,
A tree grown through his heart. He has become
Great with the soil, and holds converse with God,
Who is a tree rearing through his heart
And the red clay drawing his body home.

Theory and Practice

By Our Military Correspondent

The Command of the Air. By Giulio Douhet. Faber and Faber. 15/- net.

Ordeal by Battle. By Cyril Falls. Methuen. 6/- net.

THESE are certainly two of the most instructive of recent war books. Strictly speaking, General Douhet's work can hardly be called a "war" book—seeing that the author died in 1930. But it is the first time that it has appeared in its entirety in an English translation — though, certainly, its tenets have long been familiar to R.A.F. leaders and those of the American Air Forces.

Thus, the following might be taken as the underlying motif of the precision daylight bombing raids of to-day: "When the enemy was sighted, regardless of the direction of his attack, the division was to keep flying on its route without breaking formation, but ready to fire as soon as the enemy came within range. This tactic answered to the unalterable facts of the situation. The battle division (i.e. heavy bombers) could not compete in speed and manœuvrability with the attacking pursuit units, and neither could it avoid combat, so any manœuvre to this end would be waste of energy. Since the division had to accept combat, willing or unwilling, the only thing to do was to put itself in the best position to face it, and this consisted in keeping the original formation, which allowed every plane to co-operate with the others in repelling the attack."

More generally, General Douhet's book, especially the part describing an imaginary Franco-German war of 19—, is the case for all-out strategic bombing, coupled with a largely defensive attitude on both land and sea. Much of it came true in 1940—and it may even have suggested certain aspects of Luftwaffe tactics and technique. But the book is subject to the criticism that war is dynamic, not static. No single phase or aspect can ever manifest the whole of it.

And here we get something more of the bird's eye view in "Ordeal by Battle," which envisages war as a whole, and not any special aspect thereof. The difference will become most clear if we take the view of Captain Falls on strategic bombing, precisely—although he does not do more than deal with it as one of many heads:—"The commonsense view would seem to be that strategic bombing, carried out in accordance with an intelligent plan, is a powerful adjunct to military and naval operations, and indeed, as affairs stand at present, an essential ingredient of them, but no more than that."

"Ordeal by Battle," as we have said, is a book of general view—and one replete with much information, as well as notable for the author's customary judicial treatment. But, just at the present moment, it seems an interesting point to debate whether Allied strategy, as a whole, is contemplating —and employing—strategic bombing as "a powerful adjunct to military and naval operations," or on far more definitely "Douhetist" principles.

To the present reviewer, it is the second alternative that seems to obtain—and, yet, what Captain Falls terms "the commonsense view," does seem to be such. By the way, it is interesting to note that General Douhet's heavy bomber had an endurance of nine hours flight with eight tons of bombs on a horse-power of 6,000. There have been less accurate anticipations.

Miscellaneous

No Outspan. By Doneys Reitz. Faber. 15/- net.

COLONEL REITZ is High Commissioner for South Africa and South African Minister to the Belgian, Dutch and Greek Governments; he also is Deputy Prime Minister of his country. Yet, although "No Outspan" is a story of his experiences between the close of the last war and the present time, and although he has been a member of Parliament for most of the years he writes about, there is very little of politics in the book.

His voyages into places where white men never previously were seem have not been prompted, however, by mere curiosity or desire for adventure. They have been followed in many cases by irrigation and game preservation schemes, while the information he gathered must have been of inestimable value to his country.

Colonel Reitz twice visited this country, at the time of the troubles just after the last war and a few years ago, when he had a heart-to-heart talk with Mr. de Valera. South Africa and Ireland have a great deal in common politically, so that the little that Colonel Reitz has to say about us is well worth reading.

Yes, I Hope So. By W. Arthur Bright. Heath Cranton. 5/6 net.

In this work the writer deals with some questions and problems concerning and deriving from the present situation. He has chapters on Education, Religion, The War, The Peace, Reconstruction and Thought, which last are a sort of summing-up of his findings. The book is broad and lenient, and it augurs well for the future world if there are many readers of a like mind.

The Making of Modern Britain. By J. B. Brebner and Allan Nevins. George Allen and Unwin. 7/6 net.

This colourful and vivid little history of England is obviously written for a public that likes its facts with a sugaring of descriptive prose and an absence of tiresome detail. It is more a general account of British growth to present times than a "history," in the accepted sense of the term. However, the main outlines have been carefully preserved, and the whole story is so treated that it can be read almost as a romance.

Periodicals

The Dublin Magazine (2s. 6d. net) for the current quarter contains verse by various hands, short stories and articles by Seumas O'Sullivan and John Hennig. "The Hidden Language in Old Irish Art" is a chapter by C. G. Leland, originally intended for inclusion in a book to be published with Dr. Sampson and Kuno Meyer, but later lost. The reviews, as usual, are excellent, particularly the dramatic commentary of A. J. Leventhal.

The January issue of The Bell (1s. 6d.) has the first of a series of articles by Sean O Faolain on the technique of the short story, and a further selection from Michael MacLiammoir's memoirs—dealing, in part, with Orson Welles. Other contributions to a well-varied issue are articles on public libraries, by a library assistant, and on Dublin slums, by Sheila May.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

"STOCK MARKETS, 1943"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES

SIR,—Recently attention was drawn in your columns to the prosperity being enjoyed by the drapery trade during the war years, but your correspondent might have mentioned that these companies were experiencing as good, if not better, times as far back as 1926. Dividends, it is true, have been stepped up during the war, but this is only compensating shareholders for the number of years before the war in which no dividends were paid.

The strong demand which has caused such a big rise in the price of the shares is not unusual at the present time. Drapery shares are only one of the many sections of the Stock Exchange which show a huge capital appreciation since the war began. The reason for this is clear. With a closed capital market and a shortage of supplies there is a large surplus of money awaiting investment, and the potential investor whose primary consideration is safety of capital is putting his savings into Irish securities.

Before the war about 75 p.c. of the dealings on the Dublin Exchange were in British and foreign issues, but the position now is reversed. With the demand for sound Irish industrial shares far greater than the supply, prices go ahead out of proportion to the amount of business done.

To a large extent, this explains "R. O. Berry's" question as to why the 100 companies ("Drapery, Commercial and Industrial") giving Stock Exchange quotations show a net aggregate capital appreciation of no less than 14 p.c. in the fourth year of the emergency.

As long as cheap money remains in force these conditions may be expected to continue, but shareholders and speculators may receive a rude awakening in the post-war years.—Yours, etc.,

EDMUND HONEYMAN.

Belgrave Hotel, Rathmines.

PRIVATE FLYING

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES

SIR,—Your report of the debate between An Lingus Teo., and the Irish Aviation Club on the use of the Dublin airport for private flying, followed by the publication of the letter from Mr. Massy, may help to turn some public attention to the importance of developing aviation in Ireland. May I, as one of the club speakers, mention one or two points which may help to arouse further interest?

The points system mentioned by Mr. Massy would all be covered by a system of strict aerodrome control. In the post-war period rigid control will be enforced at all public aerodromes and will eliminate the major risks of accidents. The time may come when Collinstown will be so busy that private flying will be equally inconvenient to commercial and private pilots alike. When that time comes alternative arrangements can (and must) be made. I think it may take years to reach that stage, however, and in the meantime private pilots should have the benefit of the facilities offered by the airport.

It is not generally realised that, apart from commercial air lines, the only civil flying done in Ireland was that promoted by flying clubs and schools. These clubs and schools never got Government subsidies as they did in other countries, and, in particular, in England, where, under the Civil Air Guard Scheme, flying was made available at 2s. 6d. per hour. The Irish Aviation Club is the only survivor of those clubs which endeavoured to make this country air-minded, but eventually went out of existence owing to public apathy and lack of finance. The survivor is at present giving lectures to youth movements, and (through the courtesy of the Vocational Committee) an experimental course of lectures is being given in one of the technical schools. The resources of the club do not permit at the moment the operation of an intensive plan to develop private flying which would ultimately benefit commercial flying.

As the debate referred to it was stated that Aer Rianta, the Government-controlled company formed to promote the interests of aviation, did not consider the time ripe to formulate any plan for development, but that developments elsewhere were being closely watched. England and America are actively making plans at the moment for the post-war period of civil flying. Why cannot we do the same? Admittedly, no rigid conclusion can be come to, but a plan can be decided upon which will be followed if circumstances permit, but which will yet be flexible enough to permit of alteration to meet changing circumstances. If such a plan was announced now all interested bodies, such as local authorities wanting to build aerodromes, can arrange to dovetail their individual efforts into the general plan of development for the country.

Ireland is the key-point on the trans-Atlantic air routes. We have unique opportunities for development. Millions of pounds of public money have been invested already in the Dublin and Shannon airports, and in subsidising our only Irish air line company. It is up to the public to become air-minded and to insist on knowing what is being done to secure a proper return from the investment of its money.—Yours, etc.,

DENIS GREENE.

LIVING ARCHITECTURE

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES

SIR,—The provincial man has not the urban manifold experience of modern architecture. He admires, especially in Roscommon and South Tipperary, the superb fenestration and joyful colours of the 1935 rural cottage, and has come to like the horizontal line of the new county hospital. The churches are less frequent, as Turner's Cross, Corpus Christi (Mobhi road), and the chapel-of-ease in St. Peter's Parish, Drogheda. For two reasons he needs architectural education, because he must justify himself by raising the low architectural standard of his town and country, and, secondly, his is a unique coincidence of will and way—the Irish freedom and everyman's architecture.

Mr. O Deirg, as Minister for Education, is entitled to a nation's recognition of worthy public service for sponsoring the recent itinerant exhibition of Irish art, and thereby galvanising the wakening provincial interest in art. Art is always more remote than architecture, but architecture is the prior witness at the bar of history. Therefore, I plead for a similar exhibition of living architecture — pictorial, graphic, model of houses for poet and peasant and prayer and profit, of plans for farmyards and places for factories.

Modern architecture is the living style—our very own—aware of its dynastic past, and aglow to the dynamic present. On it, in the unfolding decades, we shall breathe our native inspiration to evoke a new national style. May it be worthy of the Irish Romanesque and of eighteenth-century architecture.—Yours, etc.,

SEAN O BUACHALLA.

"MYLES THE SLASHER"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES

SIR,—On January 6th Mr. M. W. O'Reilly proposed the formation of a "Myles the Slasher Clan," to be called after a person named "Myles Maelmordha O'Reilly," an etymological hybrid, equivalent to calling a man "John Sean O'Kelly." The historical authenticity of the Myles the Slasher legend was doubted by the late Father Paul Walsh, but, assuming that he did exist, how can Mr. O'Reilly, speaking on behalf of all the O'Reillys from Boston to Ballyjamesduff and back, claim that he is "one of our most famous ancestors"? Is not this a further instance of the common, but erroneous, belief that one may regard the native Irish aristocracy as having descended in an unbroken male line without collateral complications down to, say, the time of the great dispersal in the 1840's?

On January 10th your man, the other Myles the Slasher, deviated so far from his habitual slashification as to let Mr. O'Reilly's proposal pass with a minor, kittogue slash.

On January 8th you published a note of claims to native Irish titles "to which confirmation has been given" in the Genealogical Office or "which will probably be under consideration this year."

Yesterday, January 11th, there was an account of a young man who "intends to name himself the Prince of the Saltees."

All this, coming hot on the heels of the 1st inst. year, suggests the outbreak of a new malaise, an atavistic psychological disturbance, having seemingly epidemic manifestations.

The schlawney and sculóg ratepayers feel perturbed at these developments. Obviously the simple souls who enmesh themselves thus lightly in the tortuous snake-pattern of Irish genealogy need certification in institutions other than the Genealogical Office. Are we who supported the extravagant, destructive Milesian ascendancy by our helotry for 1,600 years to be obliged now to support their alleged descendants!—Yours, etc.,

MARCUS MACENERY.

British Agents In Rumania

Baron von Stumm, the German Foreign Office spokesman, told correspondents in Berlin yesterday that "well-known British agents" had been arrested in Rumainia.

"Their intention was to organise sabotage and also to start a peace manœuvre à la Badoglio," he said.

The German News Agency added that the four Secret Service agents had been dropped by parachute.

A spokesman of the German High Command claimed last night that the encirclement of important partisan forces in Eastern Bosnia had been completed. "Large-scale German troop movements were necessary for this," he said.

"Tito's forces, however, are still to be regarded as serious enemies in this area.

"His power was also morally strengthened by official Anglo-American recognition. His plan to create in South-eastern Europe a base at the very gates of Germany had to be taken as seriously as it was intended. Fresh German divisions detailed to defend the coast were released for energetic operations against the partisans."—(Reuter.)

Penalties Affirmed In Sugar Case

In the Dublin Circuit Civil Court yesterday Judge Davitt affirmed the fine of £50 and sentence of four months' imprisonment imposed in the Dublin District Court on Arthur Hamilton Whiteside, College Green, Dublin, for an offence under the Emergency Powers (Sugar) Order, 1941.

In the case of Edward Cronhelm, Castle Park, Rathfarnham, the judge affirmed the fine of £75, but reduced the prison sentence from four months to three, for an offence under the same Order.

Judge Davitt said that there was a suggestion that the offences might have occurred through ignorance, but, if they did, it was criminal. Sugar was an article of food the rationing of which would ensure that the poor would get a share. The action of the defendants was unfair, and the sooner that that was realised by everybody the better.

School Books

THREE more volumes have been added to the list of school editions of the classics published by Messrs. Bell in London, and in Dublin by the National Press. They are Cæsar, Book II, edited by A. C. Liddell, M.A.; Cicero, De Senectute, edited by A. S. Warman, B.A.; and Vergil's Aeneid, Book V, edited by J. T. Phillipson, M.A. Each of the books contains a useful introduction, full notes, and a number of illustrations. The price is 2s. 3d. a volume.

The same firm has issued a Trésor de Poésie Française, in two parts (elementary and middle course, and higher course), edited by Maureen Gilpatrick. The books cost 1s. 9d. and 2s. 9d. respectively. All these books are on the course for the Intermediate or Leaving Certificate examination.

Recent issues from the Government Stationery Office include Parts II and III of Seanchas ne Féinne, told by Niall O Domhnaill (2s. 6d. each); Buachaillí Bhinn Eadair, translated by Diarmuid O Súilleabháin, from the book by the Rev. M. H. Gaffney, O.M. (3s. net); and Book II of Xenaphon's Anabasis, edited with Irish notes and introduction by An tAth. Cathal Mac Giobúin, D.D. (3s. net).

Full Employment

The Means to Full Employment. By G. D. H. Cole. Gollancz. 8/- net.

AN amazing number of people in this country imagine that some ingenious manipulation of the monetary system is going to transform society. One of the main points of this able and scholarly thesis is that mere financial jugglery is not enough. Schemes like the Beveridge Plan cannot be successfully put into operation, except on the basis of "Full Employment." Consequently, full employment is going to be a fundamental question in the post-war years, and Mr. Cole is at pains to show that it cannot be achieved without considerable government interference and control, not merely in industry, but in all forms of capital expenditure.

Throughout, this thesis is argued on a purely scholarly and theoretical level, and among the various distinctions drawn is one between "structural" and "frictional" unemployment. "Frictional" unemployment arises during the period of change-over from one type of machinery to another. It is inevitable in all systems of economic life, and has not been absent even from Russia.

The cold scientific admission of this permanent condition, however, quite overlooks the sections of society which, through no fault of their own, are affected by it. It is a most regrettable feature of Irish economic life that, though much is written on the theoretical aspects of unemployment, no adequate survey of conditions in an Irish family under the pressure of unemployment has yet been published.

Recently Harper Bros. published in New York a volume called "The Unemployed," in which Dr. Eli Ginzberg, who is no stranger to Ireland, and his associates have brought together analyses of the case histories of some 180 unemployed New York families over the past ten years. This has a special interest for Irish people, as one-third of the cases examined were chosen from among the Irish Catholic population of that city, and accordingly we can study the reactions of an Irish immigrant group under trying circumstances in a new environment. It is only on studies like these that we can adequately base our understanding of the theoretical solutions offered by distinguished economists like Mr. Cole.

Transport Mysteries

Senator Mulcahy's effort to elicit some explanation of the manner in which the Government's plans for transport reorganisation were communicated to the public served some useful purposes. Lorry-owners whose vehicles do not ply for hire have received an assurance that present restrictions of their operations will be limited to conditions of emergency, and Grand Canal shareholders have been told that there is no intention to incorporate their property in the new transport pool. Of more general interest and importance were the efforts of Mr. Lemass to explain and defend the way in which the Government's plans were revealed through the medium of personal letters to the shareholders of the G.S.R. and D.U.T.C. In the course of that defence, the Minister displayed all his characteristic qualities of courage and skill in debate. Nevertheless, he contrived to evade issues which are of vital importance, and so failed to allay public anxiety about the origins and incidental consequences of the methods which were employed to reveal the Government's policy and programme. By an interesting coincidence, his statement was accompanied by a renewal of violent movements in the market prices of G.S.R. securities as the result of the company's—that is to say, of the State-appointed chairman's—decision to distribute upwards of £600,000 of a year's profits to various groups of shareholders. That extraordinary recovery in the conditions of a concern which was officially estimated a few months ago to be on the verge of bankruptcy was attributed by the Minister mainly to the introduction of improved business methods. If that claim can be sustained, it would seem to be a remarkable vindication of political leaders as organisers of business enterprise. On other aspects of the Minister's statement it is possible only to reflect that the Government is driven to choose between the horns of an awkward dilemma. Either it planned to bring about an orgy of Stock Exchange speculation, or it failed hopelessly to foresee the consequences of the methods which were adopted. When one rejects the former explanation, the other becomes inevitable—and it impels us to inquire what are likely to be the consequences of further efforts to associate State management with speculative finance. Is the policy of the proposed statutory company to be directed by solicitude for the welfare of its holders of £4,000,000 of non-guaranteed shares, or by supreme considerations of public convenience and economy? Must G.S.R. stocks—under some new title—continue to excite interest on the Stock Exchange?

Is there not some simple and straightforward way of escape from the entanglements of private interests with public policy and finance? We suggest that there is, at least, one practical alternative to the control of transport by a hybrid statutory company and a seriously overloaded Government department. When the Ministers and Secretaries Bill was introduced twenty-two years ago, this newspaper strongly opposed the assignment of transport to what Mr. de Valera might describe as a "mixum-gatherum" Ministry. As a constructive alternative, we proposed that the control of transport and of postal, telegraph and telephone services should be vested in a Ministry of Transport and Communications. We urged that such an association of kindred services would follow natural lines, and would be to the advantage of all the services named. Since that amendment was rejected, a long series of "switchback" attempts by the Ministry of Industry and Commerce to secure some degree of transport order and efficiency has proved to be hopelessly ineffective—and has led to the present imbroglio. Subject only to one modification, which affects the machinery of administration, we see no reason to abandon our twenty-year-old proposal. Having special regard to the development of road traffic since 1922, and its inevitable integration with the demands of a new age of transit by air, we would assign the control of all forms of transport to a public utility board, constituted on the lines of the Electricity Supply Board, and vested with somewhat analagous functions and authority. With the proposed Minister of Transport and Communications as its parliamentary chief and sponsor, some such board would be a natural ally of the services which now are conducted by the Department of Posts and Telegraphs. Together with the general control of traffic, the proposed board might be entrusted with the construction of arterial highways for the accommodation of traffic to be diverted from obsolete railways. Parenthetically, it may be observed that extraordinary difficulties would be bound to arise in the allocation of financial responsibilities as between public roadmaking authorities and a semi-public, semi-private, statutory company. Relations with a purely public board would be of a quite different order. When all these, and other, considerations are taken into account and balanced, there can be little doubt that the present crisis provides the opportunity, at once to retrace the false step which was taken twenty-two years ago, to relieve the heavily overburdened shoulders of the Minister for Industry and Commerce, and to make a clean break with associations which have been the cause of so much public uneasiness and distrust.

Journalism in Arms

Once upon a time, when the West was really wild, there was a fine old tradition that the editor of a newspaper should write his leading article with a pen in one hand and a Browning revolver in the other. We had thought that the day of such full-blooded journalism had passed—that the discretion of the modern newspaper-man was stimulated rather by the threat of a libel action than by the crash of bullets through the window-pane—but it seems that in the romantic lands of South America such is not the case. The Buenos Aires newspaper, La Prensa, has won itself many enemies by its fearlessness in presenting what it believes to be the truth. Don Ezequiel Paz, the editor and proprietor, was forced on one occasion to charge the patio of the offices with electricity and flood it with water, in order to ward off a hostile crowd—and this, it seems, was merely one of the trivial events which make up the monotony of everyday life for the staff of La Prensa. In the salle d'armes within the building, the editorial staff are required to perfect themselves in the use of the épée and sabre, and "Don Ezequiel himself is a dead shot." Apparently the qualifications for a South American journalist are many and varied. He must be prepared to meet with equanimity almost daily visits from the seconds of infuriated readers, and to face with confidence the matutinal issue of pistols for two and coffee for one. He must be able to dictate an article on the price of pigs, while carrying on a running "tommy-gun" battle with a mob of unpublished letter-writers; he must be ready to pick off, with a shot from the hip, the regular subscriber who has sneaked into the office to cancel both a subscription and an editor in a single outburst of righteous indignation. No doubt, he finds it useful also to have a working knowledge of knife-throwing, ju-jitsu, shorthand, and leaping-from-horse-to-horse-at-the-gallop. There can be no doubt that a journalist working under such conditions develops a fine sense of values; and we understand, in all seriousness, that the editor of La Prensa has a feeling for the integrity of his profession which must be respected. Yet the more pusillanimous Irish writer may be excused if he retains an affection for the conventions of his own land, where the pen is not necessarily the companion of the sword.

FILMS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

The type of film shown to young people and the type of building in which it was shown was criticised by members of the General Council of County Councils at a meeting in the Mansion House, Dublin, yesterday.

They were discussing a resolution by Mr. T. FitzPatrick, Wicklow, that the regulations under the Cinematograph Act regarding cinema licences were not in accordance with public needs and should be amended.

Mr. FitzPatrick said that he considered that, while they had a censorship, it was the duty of the local bodies to look after the interests of the children in their areas. He would like to see a local committee exercising supervision.

When amendments, that certain types of pictures should not be seen by children under certain ages, and that cinemas should be improved, particularly in regard to public health, had been accepted, the resolution was adopted.

ROTATIONAL CROP PLANTING

By G. O. SHERRARD.

THE gardener must now make decisions as to the cropping of his vegetable garden during the forthcoming year. He has to allot the ground for each crop, bearing in mind the need for a rotation of crops, as far as possible, and taking into consideration the previous manuring of the ground, and the manurial residue left for the next crop. As an example of the last point, a piece of ground carrying Brussels sprouts, which have occupied it since last June, and are a most exhausting crop, will need a heavy manuring, whereas ground that was under celery or potatoes may well have a sufficient manurial residue to support another crop.

The most favoured position in the vegetable garden is the South Border, especially if it is backed by a wall. It should be devoted to early crops, such as early potatoes, or first sowings of peas. The peas may have early lettuce planted between the lines, to be followed by kidney beans. The early potatoes cleared in June may be followed by turnips or lettuce, or dwarf carrots, or a cabbage crop. Ground that was cropped with celery is in a very favourable condition to carry almost any crop without further manuring.

Early cauliflowers, onions, parsnips or peas are some which suggest themselves. Leeks are best succeeded by a member of the cabbage tribe, and the ground will probably need manuring. Savoy cabbage, which is now being cut, could, if it is cleared this month, be succeeded by onions or parsnips, provided it is manured in autumn. The ground for onions and parsnips should be manured in winter, not at sowing time. In many gardens it will be ready now with the surface left rough, and only needing to be broken down to be ready for sowing.

Late Savoy can be followed by potatoes; it is hard to arrange a rotation for the members of the cabbage tribe, between them they occupy so much ground in the garden, and yet they should not follow one another, as they are a hungry lot. Brussels sprouts are often not cleared until the end of March, and they leave the ground in a very bad condition, owing to the tramping it has received in picking them during the winter. Celery would make a good succession crop. Spring cabbage cut during April and May might be followed by peas, kidney beans, carrots or leeks. Parsnips could be succeeded by spring-planted cabbage, but they take a lot out of the ground, and heavy manuring will be necessary.

The bed destined for spring-sown onions should be as far as possible from that in which autumn-sown onions have been planted, as the latter may well carry within them the disease, onion mildew, ready to break out into spores in the first warm weather and spread infection all round. This disease also remains in the ground after an onion crop, so that onions must not succeed onions.

The ground which must be prepared as soon as it is workable is that for planting of cabbage, lettuce and onions, and for the sowing of peas, broad beans, parsnips and onions, as these may take place towards the end of February if the weather is favourable.

CRUISKEEN LAWN

By Myles na gCopaleen

THE G.S.R. proposals to amalgamate all public transport undertakings interest me chiefly because, as a railway person, I went into all this matter most thoroughly about fifteen years ago and I dislike the scheme.

Percy-cos odi, puer, apparatus.

And why? Because it will not work. It is naive. It takes no account of the sociological considerations inherent in this business of public carrying.

Transportation is really a disease. Its organs are chronically obsolescent. Our railway mess alone has led to a great number of frantic commissions, inquiries, and what-not in the last twenty years. (I purposely exclude here any mention of technical steam matters, a scandal not lightly to be treated with oblique mention.) We are trying to sustain a thing that is dead. And why? Because "vast capital sums" have been "sunk" in the concern. Take myself. I conceive myself to be the repository of about £4,000 capital, inextricably sunk in erecting this most noble edifice, this Jem of the silver saoi, this demi-parrot-eyes, this singlet. Yet if I should become "uneconomic" will government guarantees be forthcoming to sustain me? (I know the answer to that question.)

Transport, curiously enough, moves too rapidly. To lay a railway according to certain grades, speed-curves and so on, required millions of pounds even when labour was for nothing. To provide all the moveable stock more millions were necessary. This great organisation is barely functioning when it has to be hastily revised, for public taste is changing, populations are shifting, perhaps the whole economy of the country altering. It is deplorable. Millions more, which must be found from revenue, are quickly poured out in the pursuit of custom. But the pursuit is too slow. New modes of travel have appeared and the railway, now beggared and breaking down, tries to oat its enemies. At the moment of going to press, it seems that the motor-car itself is nearly extinct. No, it is no use. Nor will the present modest proposal of a polygamous marriage be effective either. Ireland, in My Honour's view is too small to sustain profitably and wholesomely any railway undertaking. Of overheads and dunderheads there are far too many. Of washing to exchange, too little. The railroad is the artery of a sprawling continent. What we need in this little town is a good tram-service. And the Royal Irish Academy of the Post-War World has invented a vast machine which running a mile a day on the G.S.R. line from Dublin to Cork, will lay in its wake a perfect concrete road. That then is the line upon which to think.

But do I speak in parables? The railway, being humanly contrived, is very human in decline. Man himself is much in the same mess as the G.S.R. He has lost the old readiness to make way for others. He believes he can be patched up, overhauled, re-made and brought up-to-date no matter how often his boilers and fire-boxes break down. Consider the stupendous edifice of "social services" which has been reared in the last fifty years, all aimed at prolonging life. Why then this concern to live forever—or at least to live longer? Why, the answer is to be found in the foul sophistication that has been conferred on the world by this cult of compulsory literacy. When human propagation was unplanned, natural and unselfconscious, statesmen had no worries about their respective populations. Tell me by all means that vast populations subsisted in the past on pig-in conditions that would not be heard of to-day. True, perhaps, but all such things are relative. Maybe they were happy (though I doubt it, seeing there was no Standard to read). But learning always means less (and possibly better) people, so that to-day the humans are dwindling precariously, and must be treasured to the last in State-endowed cots. The few young ones who are around have to work harder than anyone ever worked before to sustain this great host of seniors and the grandiose mechanism of senile convalescence, which, for all the gifts of "science" must end in a fatal relapse. As time goes on and the burden on the workers and producers grows ever heavier, old age and incapacity will set in at 40. After a further time, it simply will not be worth while to be born. It will be like leaping perilously on a moving bus, finding it is the wrong one, and suicidally leaping off again.

And if the G.S.R. proposition is sound, why not apply the formula to H.M. Western Man? Why did we not amalgamate when we were given the chance, government guarantees and all?

(That is all for today. Smith Minor, please remain behind and explain why you did not wash your neck today either).

DR. P. O'SULLIVAN'S APPOINTMENT

The appointment of Dr. Proinnsias O'Sullivan to the Chief Inspectorship of the Vocational Branch of the Department of Education, in place of Mr. J. Ingram, who has taken a new post in the Department of Industry and Commerce, will probably be announced within the next few days, an Irish Times reporter learned last night. Dr. O'Sullivan was at one time on the staff of the University of Freiburg, and is a Doctor of Philosophy. Within the last few years he has been in charge of special courses in Irish being given in Dublin to specially selected groups of teachers, with a view to fitting them to help in the general spread of Irish in their districts.

"WAR WILL NOT END SOON"

Colonel Frank Knox, United States Secretary to the Navy, said yesterday that it was wishful thinking to believe that the European conflict would end soon because of the deterioration on the German home front.

"A quick ending of the war is unlikely," he added. "Those who wishfully think for an early end are necessarily doing a disservice to the war effort. There is no ground for hope that the German home front will collapse.

Baldoyle 'Chase

PRINCE Regent, naturally, has been given top-weight for the £1,000 Baldoyle 'Chase, to be run on Saturday, February 12th; but he has to concede 15lb. less to Golden Jack than when the latter beat him in the Irish Grand National at Fairyhouse, the occasion on which the pair last met. Mr. Rank's horse also has a pull with Glengormley as compared with the terms on which they met at Naas in December, when Glengormley, in receipt of 42lb., finished four and a half lengths in front of Prince Regent; the difference between them now is 32lb. Prince Regent was regarded as unlucky in that race at Naas, and another that was the victim of misfortune when going well was Erinox, who here can meet Prince Regent on the same terms, and has an advantage of 10lb. with Glengormley.

Mr. Rank has two other candidates in Funny and Broken Promise, and the former won at the recent Baldoyle meeting. He scored then by three lengths from Prince Blackthorn, who was conceding 9lb., whereas the latter is asked to allow only 2lb. in this event. Mountain Loch probably will be fancied with 11-0 on her back, and there is always the possibility that one amongst the 9-7 division may create a surprise.

The first acceptance stage is on Wednesday next, and there is another on February 2nd. The weights are:—

— BALDOYLE HANDICAP STEEPLECHASE of 1,000 sovs. 4lb. 3m. and 100 yds. winner of a steeplechase after January 14th, 4lb. extra; winner of two steeplechases or of a steeplechase value 145 sovs., 8lb. extra. Horses originally handicapped at 12st. or over to carry only half penalty. Horses not struck out on January 19th, 1944, pay 3 sovs. extra, and those not struck out on February 2nd, 1944, pay 5 sovs. additional.

Midland Puppy Wins Irish Coursing Cup

By MASTER McGRATH

IT was an amazing Irish Cup coursing meeting that concluded on Clonamana on yesterday afternoon in a truly remarkable triumph for the Midlands' puppy, Lost Light, whose prospects when the betting opened on Wednesday morning were rated at 66 to 1.

The runner-up was the 40 to 1 chance, Mr. Billy Conn, who for the deciding course was a strong favourite at 5 to 2 on, as much as 2 to 1 being offered against the puppy by reason of the difference in the handicap.

In the semi-final round, against Lucky House, Mr. Billy Conn had a mere pipe-opener. If the slip had been ten yards shorter a Cork dog must have made the opening turn, as for a long way he was clear of his opponent; but Mr. Billy Conn forged ahead, to score the vital points by a couple of lengths, placed the brindled, but like a streak of lightning crossed over for the kill.

Lost Light had a course with Colorado Bill that went the whole way, but before it ended the fawn was spun out. Lost Light, however, continued to drive the hare, and when he reached the last round he was the outsider.

In the decider it was one of the finest buckles of the three days. Nearing the hare Lost Light steadied himself nicely, but was almost shot for the turn. They exchanged quickly and coursed along the far side, but, showing surprising pace, Lost Light went by twice, coursed brilliantly, and with the black fading out badly, it was a hollow victory for the puppy.

The winner, owned by Dr. F. Martin, of Athlone, was nominated by Mr. J. J. Clyne, of the same town, and Lost Light was his first nomination for the Cup. Except for winning the Ryan Cup for two-course all-ages at Kilmithil in December, Lost Light had no public form. Mr. Billy Conn, the property of Mr. J. J. Moran, Knock, West Clare, was named by Mr. D. O'Loughlen, Lisdoonvarna. His only win was in the Trial Stakes at Athlone.

IRISH CUP—For 64 all ages. Winner £400 and cup, second £130, two £50, four £20, eight £10.

Third Round—Mr. Billy Conn (2l.) beat Lucky House; Lost Light (3l.) beat Colorado Bill.

Deciding Course—Mr. J. J. Clyne ns. Dr. F. Martin's bd. d. p. LOST LIGHT (Rebel Light—Miss McCloud) (1l.) beat Mr. D. O'Loghlen ns. Mr. J. J. Moran's bk. m. MR. BILLY CONN (Rowley Regis—Sally's Delight).

IRISH PLATE—For 9 dogs beaten in second round of the Cup. Winner £60, second £20, two £10, four £5.

Second Round—Broth of a Boy (5l.) beat Gortmore Ration; Discretion (3l.) beat Summer Lightning; Rebel of the Lee a bye.

Third Round—Discretion (2l.) beat Rebel of the Lee; Broth of a Boy a bye.

Deciding Course—Mr. D. Dunne's f. b. DISCRETION (Creamery Border—Noreside Ruby) and Mr. D. Slattery ns. be. d. BROTH OF A BOY (Bonny Bob—Mental Beauty) divided without the latter running the bye.

IRISH PURSE—For 23 dogs beaten in first round of the Cup. Winner £60, second £20, two £10, four £5.

Third Round—Gaelic Slashaway a bye, Dr. Tibbles drawn; Afterwards (3l.) beat Just Leading; Irish Life a bye, Bashful Man drawn.

Fourth Round—Afterwards (4l.) beat Gaelic Slashaway; Irish Life a bye.

Mr. Joseph Clyne ns. bk. d. Afterwards (Creamery Border—Slieve na Calliche) and Mr. P. O'Sullivan ns. f. d. Irish Life (Rowley Regis—Whirlpool) divided.

Capital Feather-Weight Contest at Stadium

A GRAND feather-weight contest between Cpl. P. Kenny (A.A.A.) and M. O'Neill (Belfast), followed by two bouts ending in knock-outs, gave a fillip to an otherwise rather quiet programme at the Stadium last night. Cpl. Kenny, runner-up in the recent junior championships, was given a hard run by O'Neill, a fiery type, who, however, lost some good chances by timing his punches badly. Kenny's superiority did not really show itself till the final round, when he handed out some heavy punishment, but he had O'Neill very groggy when the bell went, and was a deserving winner on points.

The greater part of the programme consisted of a tourney between the Garda and the R.U.C., and this the R.U.C. won by four bouts to two. One of the best contests in the tourney was the heavyweight bout between Garda Troy and P.C. Broderick, which the latter won on a knock-out. Troy gave a very promising display in the early stages, punching straight and hard, but he was overcome by Broderick's fierce onslaught in the last round, taking the full count after having been down previously for five.

P.-C. Haydock and Garda O'Donnell also gave a rousing display, the former's straight left being the chief factor in gaining him a points win.

Lost Light had a course with Colorado Bill that went the whole way, but before it ended the fawn was spun out. Lost Light, however, continued to drive the hare, and when he reached the last round he was the outsider.

In the decider it was one of the finest buckles of the three days. Nearing the hare Lost Light steadied himself nicely, but was almost shot for the turn. They exchanged quickly and coursed along the far side, but, showing surprising pace, Lost Light went by twice, coursed brilliantly, and with the black fading out badly, it was a hollow victory for the puppy.

The winner, owned by Dr. F. Martin, of Athlone, was nominated by Mr. J. J. Clyne, of the same town, and Lost Light

Mr. Lemass's Defence of Children's Bill

REPLYING to critics of the Children's Allowances Bill, who declared that there was no substantial public demand for it, Mr. LEMASS, Minister for Industry and Commerce, yesterday told Senators that there was sufficient information available to the Government to show that the scheme was necessary. He denied that the institution of such a scheme was contrary to Catholic teaching, or that it involved an expansion of purchasing power.

"I should like to have found it possible," he said, "to adopt, in some form, the contributory system in relation to this scheme, because I believe that the development of social security services will be facilitated if we can get the contributory system accepted."

Frequently, he said, he had thought of having a survey of social conditions carried out in this country, but, unfortunately, since the present Government assumed office, they never had had a reasonably long period in which it could be said that conditions were normal. They had always had an economic or physical war, and the temptation was to postpone a survey until something approaching normal conditions existed—when the findings resulting from it could be regarded as reasonably valid. It was incorrect to state that the Government had withheld from Senators any information concerning social conditions.

It might be, he said, that Catholic teaching did not require them to enact such legislation, but he was quite certain that there was nothing in Catholic teaching declaring that it was undesirable to do so. On the contrary, various Catholic publications—including two Encyclicals—he had seen on the matter had all commended the idea.

Objecting strongly to a comparison of the bill with the Beveridge Report, Mr. LEMASS said that, whereas the report was one man's plan, the bill had been introduced by Government which was prepared to put the system of allowances into operation within a few months. If they had full employment here it would be possible to embark on far more elaborate schemes of social protection than we now found possible. By setting up this service they merely proposed transferring purchasing power from one section of the community to the other.

So far as marriage allowances were concerned, he did not think that was a matter that arose on this bill. The cost of family allowances was likely to be higher in this country than elsewhere, because of the low marriage rate and a high birth rate. It was thought better to have a "flat rate," irrespective of the size of the families. The suggestion that income tax payers who did not draw the allowances should not suffer any reduction in their allowances in income tax was not practicable, and it was undesirable, too, in so far as it would involve a check-up. He did not agree that the payments should be made in kind. He thought they could devise a system whereby those who desired to have the allowance paid into a banking account.

Mr. DONAL O'SULLIVAN said he felt there was no immediate necessity for the introduction of the bill; that there was no substantial public demand for it. Their existing social services cost £10,000,000, and now on one social service, which he did not think was necessary at the moment, they were proposing to spend 25 per cent. more. He would plead for caution in this matter of expenditure that was not absolutely essential at the moment.

The second stage was agreed to.

G.N.R. Issues Go Ahead: Canal Shares Slump

MARKETS made a busy showing on the Dublin Stock Exchange yesterday, and public interest was on a broader scale. Railways claimed the bulk of attention, and Irish Industrials were livelier.

In the Railway group Great Northern issues were the outstanding feature. In view of the Great Southern dividend announcement, the general feeling seemed to be that the Great Northern Company has done extremely well during the past year.

There was brisk business in the Ordinary all day, and strong buying put it 2½ points higher to 27½; the Preference advanced to 45½ and the Deb. jumped a point to 62½.

Great Southern Guar. and Deb. both held their previous levels, but the Preference came on offer, and fell 1½ points to 46½. Dublin Transport issues held steady.

The announcement that the Grand Canal Company was not to be merged into the new statutory company came as a disappointment to certain people. The Ord. Stock opened sellers, and relapsed 9s. to 100s.

Quiet conditions prevailed among Home Government Funds, and Fourth National Loan drooped to 105¼. 3½ p.c. War Loan hardened to 103⅝. Bank of Ireland Stock fell a further point to 345, and Royals declined to 12½. Hibernians and Nationals held steady.

There was quiet buying of Guinness units up to 125s. 6d. Pim Bros. Deb. spurted 3½ points to 82, and Switzer Ord. rose to 23s. 9d. E. and J. Burke Ord. hardened to 5s., and Clondalkin Paper Ord. to 6s. 6d.; but Carroll Ord. shaded off to 34s. Irish Times Preferences were the turn easier, but Sunbeam-Wolsey Ord. recovered to 57s.

Gay Kindersley Goes To Eton

THE Supreme Court (the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Murnaghan, Mr. Justice O'Byrne, and Mr. Justice Black) in Dublin yesterday dismissed, with costs, the appeal of Lady Oranmore and Browne from the decision of the High Court, directing that Gay Kindersley, son of her former marriage with Captain the Hon. Philip Kindersley, now a prisoner of war, should be given to the custody of the boy's grandfather, Lord Kindersley, to be taken to England to be educated at Eton College, in accordance with the wishes of his father. The proceedings had occupied 15 days in the Courts.

It was sought to have the order of the High Court varied so that Lady Oranmore and Browne should have general custody of the boy and that she should be at liberty to bring him into the jurisdiction here during his holidays.

The Supreme Court directed that the boy should be given to Lord Kindersley at 4 o'clock yesterday evening, and that was done.

Mr. Cecil Lavery, S.C.; Mr. R. McGonigal, S.C.; and Mr. E. C. Micks (instructed by Mr. Gerald Maguire) appeared for Lady Oranmore and Browne; and Mr. W. H. Carson, S.C.; Mr. Kingsmill Moore, S.C.; and Mr. E. S. Robinson (instructed by Messrs. Hayes and Sons) for the Hon. Philip Kindersley.

THE NEW ORDER

Lady Oranmore and Browne was, said Mr. McGonigal, in a worse position under the order made by the High Court last Thursday than she had been under the original order, because when the original order was made she had an oral assurance from the father's counsel that it was not intended to take the custody of the child from her, and that no obstacle would be placed in the way of his returning to Ireland to spend his holidays with her; and that assurance had been withdrawn by a letter written by the Hon. Philip Kindersley's solicitors on December 16th last. In a single sentence that letter confined their obligation to a statement that, if Lady Oranmore and Browne applied to the High Court in England to have varied the order of 1940, directing her to bring Gay within the jurisdiction of that Court, no objection would be raised on their part.

The boy would go to Eton, and Lady Oranmore and Browne's sole object now was to preserve a home for him, to preserve for him the companionship of his sister, and the influence which a permanent home with his mother and sister must have on the formation of his character. These rights were fundamental, and no other relationship could be any real substitute. If the war had not intervened he would now be at Eton, with his mother's full approval, and would spend the greater part of his holidays with her, with his father's full approval.

Mr. Justice Murnaghan—What you are really asking is this, that he should not be allowed to leave Eire until the English Court makes an order satisfactory to the mother?

Mr. McGonigal—Makes an order which is in consonance with the directions of this Court. I am not asking that the order of this Court should be presented to the English Court; I am only asking that this Court should retain its custody until it is satisfied that the child will be returned here for his holidays.

Mr. Justice Murnaghan asked was there any serious fear that, if application were made to the English Court, the English Court would not let the boy go to his mother.

Mr. McGonigal replied that Lady Oranmore and Browne was apprehensive that that would occur.

Mr. Justice Murnaghan—I don't see any reasonable fear, when the English Court, with the consent of both parents, made definite arrangements, that they will not carry them out.

The Chief Justice said that it was because of their consideration for the mother that the Supreme Court had fixed the return day as late as possible, and, notwithstanding any apprehension that the mother might have, this matter must be looked at on a reasonable basis.

Mr. Justice Murnaghan asked why, when the English Court had allowed the boy's sister to remain in this country for years, should they anticipate that, without any objection on the father's part, they would not allow the boy to spend portion of his holidays here.

Mr. McGonigal said that it appeared from the judgment of the Supreme Court that, consonant with sending the boy away to ensure his education at Eton, they equally wished to ensure that he would return to his mother for portion of his holidays. He submitted that, with that in mind, the High Court was directed that, on the return, arrangements should be made to achieve that, but there was nothing in the order of the High Court dealing with that question.

The Chief Justice said it appeared as if they were being asked to make a bargain with the English Court, and say, in effect, "If you make an order allowing the boy to be taken out of your jurisdiction for the holidays, we will make an order directing him to be sent to England."

During the argument Mr. Carson, answering the Court, said that he was prepared to support an application to vary the order of the English Court to permit the boy to return to Ireland on holiday. Lord Kindersley had suggested to him that it might be unwise to send the boy over for the three or four holiday periods, mentioned in the order of the English Court, that he should spend with his mother, but that all these periods should be added up. That, however, seemed to be a matter for arrangement. It did not take away from the effect of the order.

The Court did not call on the other side to reply.

COURT'S ORDER

The Chief Justice, who delivered the judgment of the Court, said that an order in terms as suggested in the notice of appeal would be quite inconsistent with the order made by the Supreme Court when the matter was before it previously. That suggestion was that until an application was made to the English Courts, and until they made an order permitting the boy to return to Ireland for his vacation, no order should be made to send the boy to Eton.

It was not necessary to consider how the Court would have dealt with appellant's objections to the undertaking contained in the letter of Messrs. Hayes and Sons, incorporated in the High Court order, in view of the attitude of counsel for Captain Kinderley. Mr. Carson had stated in that Court that as far as the holiday period was concerned Lord Kinderley agreed that the boy should spend portion of his holidays with his mother in accordance with the arrangements embodied in the English order of 1935, and undertook to support any application to the Courts in England for liberty to take the infant out of the jurisdiction of that Court to give effect to that arrangement. That disposed of the matters raised on the appeal from the Order of the High Court, which, in the opinion of the Court, should be dismissed.

The boy appeared in the High Court with Lord and Lady Kindersley at 4.10 p.m., when Mr. Justice Haugh and Mr. Justice Overend were informed that he had been given into the custody of Lord Kindersley as directed by the Supreme Court.

The parties then left.

The Lands have been divided up with the object of giving numerous prospective purchasers an opportunity of acquiring a portion or portions of this valuable estate. The Lands are held free of rent for ever, and all Lots will be sold free of rent. The divisions into which the Lands are divided have the advantage of all the Lots having separate entrances and gates from the two roads leading through the Property, and, in addition, each Lot has the added advantage of a never-failing supply of water. Some of the divisions have valuable plantations of growing timber, covering an area in some cases of up to 10 acres while other Lots have some valuable fully matured timber.
CLONBOY HOUSE, the first Lot, will be offered for Sale by Auction, together with part of the Lands of Clonboy, containing 10 acres 1 rood and 2 perches or thereabouts, S.M., excluding the Gate Lodge and Out-offices, but comprising main entrance gate, avenue, growing timber, lawn, with lake in front of House; kitchen garden and portion of the Lands adjoining the out-buildings.
